Writing a Scientific Article

Do you have little or no trouble reading specialist literature in English, but do you find writing your own English-language articles to be a tall order? After taking our Writing a Scientific Article workshop, you will be able to write an article yourself with no difficulty at all.

What will you learn?

The workshop offers you a step-by-step approach to improving your own article. You'll first decide on the best structure for your article. Then you'll work on your sections and paragraphs, and finally we'll focus on fine-tuning your sentences and sentence structure. You'll find scientific writing in English to be easier than ever thanks to our tried-and-true approach.

Programme

- How can you improve the readability of your article?
- How do you write well-structured, coherent paragraphs?
- How do you formulate sentences with impact?
- Using proper style
- When should you use active or passive verb forms?
- How do you use various verb tenses in an article?
- Useful word combinations to enhance your academic vocabulary
- Avoiding common errors
- Referring to other sources correctly (e.g. when and how to cite or paraphrase, issues of academic integrity)

Who is it for?

PhD students who are preparing their dissertation in English, and for scientists and researchers who want to publish in an English-language specialist journal.
